1. Weekly Working Time

For most workers, average weekly working time should not normally exceed 48 hours. Workers can sometimes agree to opt out of the 48-hour average limit, subject to applicable rules.

2. Rest

Workers generally have rights to rest breaks during the working day and daily and weekly rest periods. Exact entitlement can depend on age, sector and working pattern.

3. Record Keeping

Employers should keep adequate records to demonstrate compliance with working-time requirements and apply time-recording processes consistently.

4. Important Caveat

This practice document is synthetic material for RAG development and interview practice. It is not legal advice or a substitute for checking current GOV.UK guidance or legislation.
